Is the COVID-19 Vaccine Trustworthy? A Biblical Conversation About Science

On Sabbath, May 15, at 4 p.m. EDT, join a special COVID-19 vaccine symposium presented by the North American Division. Healthcare professionals, communication experts, and church theologians will talk about how the Bible and science interconnect, so we can make wise decisions about the vaccine. This broadcast will air on Hope Channel, the NAD Facebook page, and the NAD YouTube channel.

Organizers stated that the purpose of the symposium is to provide vaccine education and to address some of the major questions and hesitations regarding the COVID-19 vaccines among Seventh-day Adventists. "We are planning for the symposium to be pastoral in tone," said organizers. "The emphasis will be on discussion and dialogue — and respect for individual choice."

Presenters will include evangelist Mark Finley and church historian Merlin Burt; and they will discuss the theology and history of the church's relationship with science. Medical experts will include doctors Peter Landless and David Williams; they will discuss the research behind the vaccines. Media and communication experts will also participate, to share how to deliver accurate information about the vaccines.
